That in itself can be kind of fun, but I personally find it jarring - especially when combined with the other elements of the game's design.

This is mostly a problem when you go as fast as you can through a level only to find that timing leaves you launching yourself into enemies rhythmically, forcing you to learn to add a quarter or half of a second to your time when necessary.. Nail-biting moments under pressure are great, but when the game thrives off throwing them at you constantly, you get overwhelmed - I found even with near perfect execution of the shortest path I was cutting it close on time, combining that with the oddity of the controls, you have a frustrating experience - you have to send the stick fully in one direction and then release it to neutral to fire, rather than aiming with stick and firing with a button, and if you think you've flicked and your character doesn't move it can be confusing.. A twitchy puzzle-platformer, where speed and precise analog stick control is key. Es Un Mac Bueno Para Fortnite

The necessity to time and aim correctly with the constant pressure of time can get extremely annoying when you can nail the first 4 levels of a run yet the 5th and final one defeats you because you hesitated or you didn't flick the stick correctly and now you have to do the first 4 again with the same precision.. hopiko nintendo switch hopiko achievement guide hopiko android hopiko trueachievements..
